Stanford University seeks to hire as many as 10 strong researchers and scholars--campus-wide--who study the significance of race in American society, including the nature and persistence of racial inequality and its consequences. We seek to support, deepen, and enhance the important research and teaching in these areas long underway on our campus.

Appointments will be made in the following schools and departments: Stanford Law School, Stanford Graduate School of Business, Stanford Graduate School of Education, and the following departments within the School of Humanities and Sciences: Economics, Political Science, Psychology, Sociology, Philosophy, History, and Religious Studies. Rank is open, although there is the expectation that a majority of the appointments will be made at the assistant professor level. We are particularly interested in candidates with outstanding records of achievement in developing or using innovative approaches in the broad areas of their discipline.

For candidates seeking appointments at Stanford Law School, review of applications will begin immediately and on a rolling basis. Applications should be sent to appointments@law.stanford.edu, with a cover letter describing academic background and teaching experience, a curriculum vitae, a research statement of 3-5 pages, and the names of three recommenders. Please direct questions to Amy Applebaum at amya@law.stanford.edu. Stanford is an equal employment opportunity and affirmative action employer. All qualified applicants will receive consideration for employment without regard to race, color, religion, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, national origin, disability, protected veteran status, or any other characteristic protected by law. People of color, women, LGBT candidates, and others from groups underrepresented in the legal academy are strongly encouraged to apply.
